Buenos Aires, Argentina

Buenos Aires, the capital of Argentina, brims with creative energy. The Porteños warmly welcome you to this melting pot of diverse cultures. The city boasts 300 theaters and 160 museums, including the Museo Nacional de Arte Decorativo and the Teatro Colón. For shopping, explore Galerías Pacifico or the boutiques in the Recoleta neighborhood. Enjoy local cuisine, discover maté, renowned steaks, Malbec wines, and savor alfajores, cookies filled with dulce de leche.

Ushuaia, Argentina

No city is further south than Ushuaia. In the summer, the sun shines for 18 hours a day, illuminating glaciers, forests, and the sea. Once a missionary and penal colony, Ushuaia is now a tourist destination with restaurants, tours, and casinos. Explore the Tierra del Fuego National Park and the End of the World Museum. Savor king crab, ceviche, grilled octopus, and Fuegian lamb paired with regional wines.

Cape Horn, Chile

Tierra del Fuego, "Land of Fire," is the most isolated place in the Americas, with Cape Horn as its southernmost point. Named in 1616, its rugged cliffs offer a stark beauty. At Cape Horn, the Atlantic and Pacific oceans meet, creating either violent waves or gentle currents depending on the season. Visit the Cabo de Hornos National Park, a UNESCO-protected ecosystem covering 155,906 acres with diverse flora and fauna.

Schollart Channel, Antarctica

Embark on an adventure to the ends of the earth with a cruise through the Schollart Channel. Marvel at the spectacular wildlife of the South Pole, with its towering ice formations, humpback whales, penguins, and leopard seals. Between Anvers Island to the southwest and Brabant Island to the northeast, enjoy breathtaking views in this extreme environment. You'll leave with unforgettable memories and photos after your cruise near Antarctica.

Paradise Bay, Antarctica

This name perfectly reflects the stunning beauty of this place, where clear waters beautifully mirror the spectacular mountains such as Rojas Peak, Bryde Peak, and Petzvol Glacier. In these waters, we can see Minke whales feeding and Gentoo penguins curiously observing us from the rocky shores.

Gerlache Strait, Antarctica

Several geographical anomalies around this channel make these waters among the richest in plankton in the world. You will likely have the chance to see numerous whales feeding in this rich ecosystem, an unforgettable sight.

Elephant Island, Antarctica

This small island in the Weddell Sea, Antarctica, is famous for Sir Ernest Shackleton's 1914 expedition, where his crew found refuge after being trapped in the ice. Claimed by Argentina, Chile, the United Kingdom, and Brazil, the island hosts researchers during the summer. During your Antarctic cruise, discover elephant seals, penguins, and other birds, as well as ancient moss colonies. An unforgettable experience awaits you.

Port Stanley, Falkland Island

Meet the approximately 2,000 brave souls who call this former whaling station home. As you explore the rugged, wind-swept landscape, you'll have the chance to see Magellanic penguins digging their burrows and rockhopper penguins watching you intently from the outcrops.

Puerto Madryn, Argentina

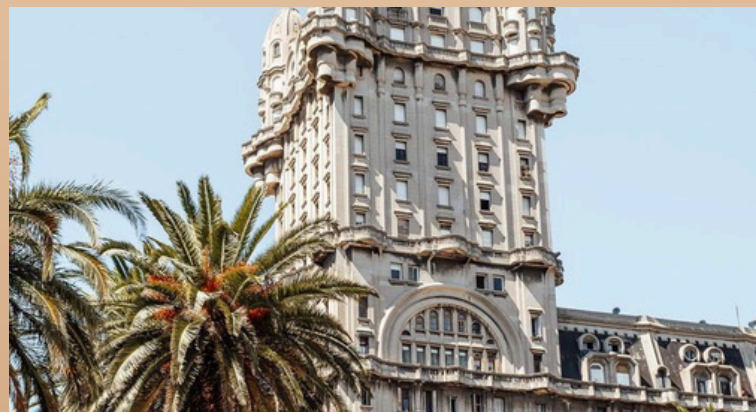

This deep-water port was established in 1865 by Welsh immigrants. Extending into the Atlantic from Puerto Madryn is the Península Valdés, a wildlife sanctuary where immense populations of sea elephants, whales, and penguins greatly outnumber the few human visitors who venture this far.

Montevideo, Uruguay

Montevideo is a modern city with a rich artistic tradition, surrounded by vast rural estancias. Take the opportunity to enjoy delicious steaks, a specialty found in nearly every restaurant.
